

Builder's legs dangling through bedroom ceiling

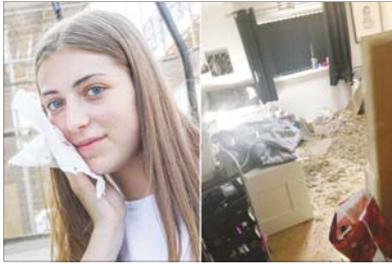

A sleeping teenager was woken by a loud bang and looked up to see a workman's legs dangling through her bedroom ceiling.

Builders were working on the house in Edwalton, Nottingham, when the family heard a loud noise followed by a high pitched scream, mirror.co.uk wrote.

Gemma Phelps, 17, was in bed when she woke to find fibreglass raining down on her head.

She told the Nottingham Post: "It felt like the room caved in - they were fixing the roof. I was in bed and it shocked me."

"I started panicking and all I could see was fibreglass covering everything, it was all over my skin and it was itching, my breathing changed and I got rushed out of my room."

Gemma's sister, Charlotte, 16, was out shopping with her mum when they heard the news and they rushed straight back home to see the damage.

Charlotte said: "I share a room with my sister and when I went in I was just so shocked, all our belongings are completely ruined and my sister has been left with a cut on her face and with some breathing difficulties.

"It is really scary, we were all evacuated from the house straight afterwards."

Mum, Lisa Phelps, 35, said that work on the roof had only just started.

She said: "They started work on the roof today, they took all the roof tiles off and someone was walking around up there and fell all the way through."

"My daughter was in bed asleep and she said she saw his legs come through the ceiling."

"It is devastating really, the damage it has caused is awful. I have eight children and it has worried me, two of them slept in that room."

Beaches closed after 'Volkswagen' sized shark sighting

Beaches in Massachusetts were closed to swimmers after a pair of fishermen recorded their close encounter with a great white shark one said was the size of a 'Volkswagen Beetle'.

Patrick Vardaro and Nick Kraszyk said they were fishing off the Plymouth coast when they spotted something in the water nearby, according to UPI. "I happened to catch a glimpse of a fin," Kraszyk told WWIT-TV.

"I said, 'Hey, let's go check that out.' As we got a little bit closer, to our surprise, about a 12-13 foot white shark."

Vardaro told WCVB-TV the shark was the size of 'a Volkswagen Beetle'.

"It was wide, it was like as wide as the front of my truck, it was huge," Vardaro told WBZ-TV.

The men captured video of the shark investigating their boat.

"He came right over to the boat," Kraszyk said.

boat." Kraszyk said.

"He was a little bit curious, and when he realized that we weren't anything special, he just turned and headed off, couldn't find him anymore."

The men shared their video swimming. Beaches in Wellfleet were also closed due to a nearby shark sighting.

The beaches were closed for about three hours, and yellow 'swim with caution' flags were then put up by officials.

Reported alligator was remote-controlled head

A Texas police department said reports of an alligator in local waters were an 'unintentional hoax' involving a remote-controlled gator head.

The New Braunfels Police Department responded in a Facebook post to photos and videos that emerged on social media and appeared to show an alligator swimming in the Comal and Guadalupe Rivers, UPI reported.

"A remote-controlled alligator head was used to create photos and videos that you may have seen on Facebook and other social media sites," the department said.

Police said it appeared to have been an 'unintentional hoax' on the part of the owner of the novelty remote-controlled item, "but still may have caused some alarm".
